To do so, leaders must learn to focus their own attention. When we speak about being focused, we commonly mean thinking about one thing while filtering out distractions. Every leader needs to cultivate this triad of awareness, in abundance and in the proper balance, because a failure to focus inward leaves one rudderless, a failure to focus on others renders one clueless, and a failure to focus outward may cause one to be blindsided. And never has it been under greater assault. If leaders are to direct the attention of their employees toward strategy and innovation, they must first learn to focus their own attention, in three broad ways: on themselves, on others, and on the wider world. A fuller understanding of how they focus on the wider world can improve their ability to devise strategy, innovate, and manage organizations. Leaders who heed their inner voices can draw on more resources to make better decisions and connect with their authentic selves. Quicktime Player For Mac Version 10
